

MAHER SATTAR

Maher Sattar is an award-winning journalist and senior editor at The Fuller Project. Maher's career has spanned broadcast, print, and digital reporting, with a decade covering South and Southeast Asia for outlets such as The New York Times, Al Jazeera, and The Washington Post. He has reported extensively on the climate crisis, migration and refugees, politics, and the international labor movement, with a particular focus on how women - such as Bangladeshi garment workers - organize for their rights in these arenas.

Before moving to New York, Maher was a lead reporter on The Washington Post's Ivanka Inc project, taking a sweeping look at the women being exploited throughout the Ivanka Trump brand's global supply chain. Since then he has covered the 2020 US primaries and general election for CBS News, and won a Webby for a documentary investigating organ traffickers targeting refugees in the Middle East. He began his journalism career as a local fixer on Water World, PBS NOW's Headliner award-winning documentary on the impact of climate change in Bangladesh.

SENIOR EDITOR

RECENT REPORTING BY MAHER

Qatar's World Cup Legacy Is Stranded Worker Widows - Foreign Policy

NYC Immigrant Communities Have Long Been Represented by White Men. Will This Election Change That? - The Fuller Project

Taxi Medallion Crisis Drives Council Candidates on Road Toward a Rescue - THE CITY

Eating last and least: Widening gender hunger gap raises climate alarm - Foreign Policy

The only cancer that won't get covered for women of 9/11 - Reckon and NJ.com

THE
FULLER
PROJECT

712 H St NE, PMB 37
Washington, DC 20002
www.fullerproject.org

